SAMPLE

Shaytan: The Enemy of Man

Shaytan in the Quran

Aira Aurora

Free sample: Introduction & Chapter 1
putrabooks.github.io

Introduction

The Quran tells the story of a being who was present at the creation of humanity, who was honored by proximity to the divine, and who threw it all away with a single act of arrogance. That being is Iblis -- known throughout the Quran as Shaytan, the adversary of humankind. His story is not a side narrative in the Quran. It is the central drama that frames the entire human experience. From the moment Allah created Adam, Shaytan has been the enemy -- the one who whispers, who deceives, who promises, and who leads away from the truth.

The Quran mentions Shaytan by name more than any other unseen being except the angels. His presence is felt in nearly every major narrative -- from the creation story to the stories of the prophets, from the commands to the believers to the descriptions of the Day of Judgment. The Quran does not treat Shaytan as a mythological figure or a symbolic abstraction. Shaytan is real. His enmity is real. His methods are real. And his ultimate defeat is real.

This book is the third in the Unseen sub-series of the NurOne project. The first book explored the angels -- the servants of Allah who obey without question. The second explored the jinn -- the beings of fire who possess free will. This book explores the one jinni who used his free will to defy his Creator and dedicated his existence to the misguidance of humanity. Shaytan is the negative of the angels -- where they obey, he refuses. He is the dark mirror of the jinn -- where some jinn believe, he chose disbelief. And he is the perpetual adversary of the human being -- the one who was asked to bow to Adam and instead vowed to destroy him.

The Quranic treatment of Shaytan is both detailed and deliberate. The Quran tells his story in multiple surahs, each time adding a different dimension. It describes his fall, his vow, his methods, his interactions with the prophets, his promises, his deceptions, and his ultimate fate. It warns the believer against him and offers the protection of remembrance. This book gathers these threads and presents Shaytan as the Quran presents him: not as a rival to Allah, not as an independent power, but as a created being who chose defiance and was given respite -- a respite that is also the test of humanity.

Chapter 1: The Fall of Iblis -- From Honor to Expulsion

The story of Iblis's fall is told in the Quran more than any other story about the unseen world. It appears in at least seven surahs -- Al-Baqarah (2), Al-A'raf (7), Al-Hijr (15), Al-Isra (17), Al-Kahf (18), Ta-Ha (20), and Sad (38). Each retelling adds a detail, a dimension, or a emphasis that the others do not. Together, they form a complete portrait of the fall.

The Command

Allah created Adam and commanded the angels to prostrate to him. The Quran states: "And when We said to the angels: prostrate to Adam, and they prostrated, except Iblis. He refused and was arrogant and became of the disbelievers" (2:34). In Surah Al-A'raf: "And We created you, then We fashioned you, then We said to the angels: prostrate to Adam. So they prostrated, except Iblis. He was not of those who prostrated" (7:11). In Surah Al-Hijr: "So the angels prostrated, all of them together, except Iblis. He refused to be with those who prostrated" (15:31-32).

The command was given to the angels, and the angels obeyed. Iblis, who was present among the angels but was not himself an angel -- "He was of the jinn" (18:50) -- also received the command. His refusal was not a failure of understanding. He heard the command. He understood it. He chose not to obey it. The Quran describes his refusal in three terms: he "refused" (2:34), he was "arrogant" (2:34), and he "became of the disbelievers" (2:34). The progression is significant: refusal is the act, arrogance is the motive, and disbelief is the spiritual consequence. A single act of disobedience, rooted in arrogance, resulted in a state of disbelief. This is the Quran's teaching on how sin works: it begins with an act, it is fueled by an attitude, and it ends in a state.

The Question

Allah questioned Iblis: "He said: what prevented you from prostrating when I commanded you? He said: I am better than him. You created me from fire and created him from clay" (7:12). The question was not a request for information -- Allah knew the answer. The question was an invitation to repent. Allah was giving Iblis the opportunity to acknowledge his error, to submit, and to return. Iblis did not take it. Instead, he justified his refusal with an argument: he was better than Adam because his origin was fire and Adam's was clay.

The argument reveals the core of Iblis's error. He measured worth by material origin -- fire versus clay -- rather than by divine choice. Allah had chosen to honor Adam. He had taught him the names (2:31). He had breathed into him of His spirit (15:29, 38:72). He had commanded the angels to prostrate. These were acts of divine honor, and they defined Adam's worth. Iblis ignored all of this and focused on what he considered the inferiority of Adam's material composition. He saw the clay but not the spirit. He saw the origin but not the destiny.

The Expulsion

Allah expelled Iblis: "He said: then descend from it, for it is not for you to be arrogant therein. So get out. Indeed, you are of the debased" (7:13). In Surah Al-Hijr: "He said: then get out of it, for indeed, you are expelled. And indeed, upon you is the curse until the Day of Judgment" (15:34-35). In Surah Sad: "He said: then get out of it, for indeed, you are driven away. And indeed, upon you is My curse until the Day of Recompense" (38:77-78).

The expulsion is described in escalating terms. In one version, Iblis is told to "descend" -- he was in an elevated position, and his arrogance brought him down. In another, he is "expelled" -- he was in a privileged position, and his refusal removed him from it. In the third, he is "driven away" -- he was in a place of proximity, and his disobedience pushed him to the margins. The curse is pronounced: it will remain on him until the Day of Judgment. The fall is total -- from honor to expulsion, from proximity to distance, from blessing to curse.

The Identity

The Quran clarifies Iblis's identity in a crucial verse: "And when We said to the angels: prostrate to Adam, and they prostrated, except Iblis. He was of the jinn, and he departed from the command of his Lord" (18:50). This verse resolves a potential confusion: if the angels were commanded to prostrate and they all obeyed, how could one of them refuse? The answer is that Iblis was not an angel. He was a jinni -- a being with free will, capable of choosing disobedience. His presence among the angels was a matter of association, not nature. He had been among them, but he was not one of them. His fall did not contradict the sinlessness of the angels because he was not an angel to begin with.

The Quran also gives Iblis another name: Shaytan. The two names are used in different contexts. Iblis is used in the narrative of the fall -- the being who refused, who argued, who was expelled. Shaytan is used in the broader Quranic discourse -- the adversary, the tempter, the one who whispers to humanity. The transition from Iblis to Shaytan is the transition from the individual to the function. Iblis is the name of the being. Shaytan is the name of the role he chose. The Quran uses "Shaytan" far more frequently than "Iblis" because the Quran's concern is not primarily with the biography of the being but with the danger he poses to the believer.