Introduction

The destruction of the people of Lut is one of the most vividly described events in the Quran. The narrative appears in multiple surahs — Surah Hud (11), Surah Al-Hijr (15), Surah Al-Anbiya (21), Surah As-Saffat (37), Surah Al-Qamar (54), and Surah Al-A'raf (7) — each passage contributing a different dimension of the story. The accumulation of references across so many surahs signals the importance of the event in the Quranic framework: it is not merely a historical account but a recurring sign, a lesson repeated for emphasis, a warning inscribed in the text for every generation.

The people of Lut were destroyed for their rejection of the prophetic message and for their practice of an act that no people before them had committed. The Quran describes their destruction with striking imagery: a rain of baked clay (15:74), a single cry (11:94), the overturning of their cities, and the turning upside down of their land. The destruction was total — the cities were obliterated, the people were killed, and the ruins were left as a sign for those who would pass by in later generations.

This book examines the destruction of the people of Lut as narrated in the Quran, exploring the context, the nature of the punishment, the role of the messengers, the Quranic theology of divine punishment, and the lessons of the event. It is part of the Events in the Quran sub-series of the NurOne master series. The book approaches the event through the Quranic text, supplemented by authentic prophetic tradition where relevant, and avoids speculation beyond what the sources provide. The event is presented as a sign that speaks to every generation, a warning preserved in the text for all who have ears to hear and hearts to reflect.

Chapter 1: The Quranic Account of the Destruction

The Quran narrates the destruction of the people of Lut in multiple surahs, each contributing a different element. Surah Hud (11:81-83) describes the angels' instruction to Lut to leave with his family at night, the command not to look back, the fate of Lut's wife, and the rain of stones. Surah Al-Hijr (15:73-77) describes the cry that seized them in the morning, the overturned cities, and the visible remains. Surah Al-Qamar (54:33-39) emphasizes the people's rejection of Lut's warning and the punishment that followed. Surah Al-Anbiya (21:74-75) emphasizes Lut's wisdom and divine protection.

The multiple accounts are not contradictory but complementary. Each surah contributes a detail or an emphasis that the others do not, and together they provide a complete picture. The repetition is itself a Quranic method: the Quran repeats important events not to fill space but to ensure that the lesson is received. The event that is narrated in one surah may be forgotten; the event narrated in six surahs cannot be forgotten, and the repetition is the Quran's way of making the lesson permanent.

The Quran describes the punishment of the people of Lut with several images. In Surah Hud, the Quran says: "So when Our command came, We made the highest part of the city its lowest and rained upon them stones of baked clay, layer upon layer" (11:82). The verse describes two elements: the overturning of the city and the rain of stones. The overturning is the physical inversion — the highest part became the lowest, the city was literally turned upside down. The rain of stones is the additional punishment — baked clay (sijjil) rained from the sky, layer upon layer.

In Surah Al-Hijr, the Quran says: "So the shout seized them at sunrise. And We made the highest part of the city its lowest and rained upon them stones of baked clay" (15:73-74). The shout (sayhah) is a sudden, overwhelming sound that destroys — it is the same punishment that destroyed the people of Salih and the people of Shu'ayb. The combination of the shout, the overturning, and the rain of stones provides a multi-dimensional description of the destruction.

The Quran specifies the timing: the shout seized them "at sunrise" (15:73). The timing is significant. The destruction came not in the darkness of night, when it might have been unseen, but at the moment when the world was brightest. The people who had rejected the warning in the daylight were destroyed in the daylight, and the brightness of the sunrise illuminated the destruction for any who might witness it. The timing is also the fulfillment of the angels' promise: they told Lut that the punishment would come in the morning (11:81), and it did.
