SAMPLE

Your First Online Sale

A Practical Path From Idea to Customer

Aiman Sterling

Free sample: Introduction & Chapter 1

putrabooks.github.io

Buy the full book:

Ko-fi

Contents

Introduction

Chapter 1: What a Sale Actually Is

Chapter 2: The Minimum Viable Transaction

Chapter 3: Preparing What You'll Sell

Chapter 4: Choosing Where to Sell

Chapter 5: Setting Up Payment

Chapter 6: Creating Your Offer Page

Chapter 7: Writing Your Sales Message

Chapter 8: Finding the Buyer

Chapter 9: The Transaction — Step by Step

Chapter 10: Delivering to Your Customer

Chapter 11: Handling Customer Questions

Chapter 12: Following Up After the Sale

Chapter 13: Common Transaction Problems and Solutions

Chapter 14: Legal and Tax Basics for Selling

Chapter 15: Learning From Your First Sale

Chapter 16: Your 7-Day First Sale Plan

Final Thoughts

Quick Start Checklist

Resources

Digital Income

This free sample contains the Introduction and Chapter 1. The complete book contains the full contents above.

Introduction

You have something to sell. Maybe it's a digital product you created. Maybe it's a service you can provide. Maybe it's something you made or sourced. You know what it is. What you don't know is how to actually complete a sale — how to go from "I have this" to "someone paid me for it."

That gap — between having something and selling it — is what this book closes.

Most guides about online selling assume you already know how transactions work. They skip the mechanics: how to set up payment, how to present your offer, how to handle the actual exchange, and what to do when things go wrong.

This book doesn't skip anything. It covers the full path from having something to sell to having money in your account — one single transaction, done properly.

This book is not about building a business, a brand, or a sales funnel. It's about completing one sale. Just one.

Why one? Because the first sale is the hardest. After you've done it once, you understand the process. The second sale is easier. The third is routine. But the first one — that's where most people get stuck. Not because it's complicated, but because they've never done it and don't know the steps.

This book walks you through every step of one transaction. Nothing more, nothing less.

- Something to sell (a product, a service, or a digital item).

- A way to accept payment (covered in this book).

- A few hours to set things up.

- The willingness to put your offer in front of someone and ask them to buy.

That's it. No website required. No email list required. No audience required. Just an offer, a buyer, and the mechanics of the transaction.

Book 1 covers the complete zero-to-one path — choosing a model, finding a niche, making your first dollar. Book 2 covers side income alongside a job. Book 3 covers creating digital products.

This book goes deep on one thing: the transaction itself. If you already know what you want to sell and just need to understand how to actually sell it — how to set up payment, how to present it, how to handle the exchange — this is your book.

This book includes a 7-day plan to make your first sale. Not 30 days — 7. Because the transaction itself is fast. The setup takes a day or two. The offer takes a day. Finding a buyer takes a few days. The sale happens in minutes once everything is in place.

Seven days. One sale. Let's begin.

What a Sale Actually Is

Chapter 1: What a Sale Actually Is

Before we talk about how to make a sale, let's make sure we're talking about the same thing. A sale is not a pitch. A sale is not a conversation. A sale is a specific event with specific components.

A sale is an exchange: someone gives you money, and you give them something of value in return. That's it. Everything else — marketing, offers, pricing, negotiation — is what happens before or after the sale. The sale itself is the moment of exchange.

Every sale, no matter how simple or complex, has five components:

Something specific that you're willing to exchange for money. A product, a service, a digital file, access to something. The offer is what the buyer receives.

A specific amount of money the buyer pays for the offer. Not "let's discuss" or "make me an offer" — a stated price that the buyer can accept or decline.

A person who wants what you're offering and is willing to pay the price. Without a buyer, you have an offer and a price but no sale.

A way for the buyer to transfer money to you. Cash, digital payment, bank transfer, platform-mediated payment. Without a way to pay, the exchange can't happen.

A way for you to deliver what you sold. A download link, a service performed, an item shipped, an email with an attachment. Without delivery, the sale is incomplete.

If any of these five is missing, you don't have a sale. You have an intention, a conversation, or a plan. A sale requires all five components to be present and functioning.

Understanding what a sale isn't helps you avoid common confusion:

- A sale is not a lead. Someone expressing interest is not a sale. They haven't paid. They might. But until money changes hands, it's not a sale.

- A sale is not a promise. "I'll buy it next week" is not a sale. The buyer might follow through. But a sale happens when payment is made, not when it's promised.

- A sale is not a conversation. Discussing your product, answering questions, building rapport — these are steps toward a sale, but they are not the sale itself.

- A sale is not free. If you give something away, that's a gift, not a sale. A sale requires payment, even if the amount is small.

Think of a sale as a discrete moment, not a process. The process leads up to the moment (marketing, outreach, conversation). The process continues after the moment (delivery, follow-up). But the sale itself is the instant when payment is made.

This distinction matters because it helps you focus. If you're trying to make your first sale, your goal is to reach that moment. Everything you do should be aimed at getting a buyer to the point where they say "yes" and pay.

The simplest online sale looks like this:

- You have something (a PDF guide).

- You set a price ($10).

- You tell someone about it ("I made a guide about X, it's $10").

- They say yes ("I'll take it").

- They pay ($10 via PayPal).

- You deliver (send the PDF).

Six steps. No website. No funnel. No automation. Just an offer, a buyer, a payment, and a delivery.

This book is about making that sequence work — cleanly, professionally, and reliably. Everything else is optional. The sequence is essential.

Before moving to the next chapter, answer these questions:

- What is the thing you want to sell? (Be specific — a product, a service, a file.)

- What price will you charge? (Pick a number, not a range.)

- Who might buy it? (Describe the person — not "anyone," but a specific type.)

- How will they pay you? (If you don't know yet, that's fine — we'll cover it.)

- How will you deliver it? (Download, in person, by email, through a platform?)

Write these down. By the end of this book, each of these five questions will have a clear, actionable answer. And you'll have made your first sale.

The Minimum Viable Transaction

End of free sample. The full book is available at putrabooks.github.io